The texts in this reader are from the ERWC 3.0 mini-modules—a special set of short, introductory or enrichment modules designed to foster rhetorical thinking and transfer of learning. The readings thus offer a focused study of rhetorical concepts and argumentation skills that prepare students to read and write across contexts. Key topics addressed by the mini-module texts include the rhetorical situation, the rhetorical appeals, genre, exigence, claims and evidence, and metacognition. The mini-module reader also includes the texts from the ERWC portfolio modules.

This reader is available for purchase by high schools that have adopted the CSU Expository Reading and Writing Curriculum. Other course materials can be obtained only by participating in professional learning programs sponsored by the California State University and the California County Superintendents Educational Services Association.
